Drag Bingo at The SPACE Completes Greenbelt's Emerald City Pride Events

by Daniel Thies

Rounding out Saturday's Greenbelt Emerald City Pride events was an evening of Drag Bingo hosted at The SPACE Free Art For All in Beltway Plaza. Dozens of couples attended the 21-and-over event, with drag performer D'Manda Martini serving as the caller.

With free admission and a beginner-friendly speed, the event was welcoming to everyone who was bingo-curious. Martini kept the tone light by mixing in jokes and anecdotes between bingo numbers and singing musical numbers between rounds. More than a few times, the players excitedly called out a premature bingo, only to realize that they still needed one or more squares filled.

Drag Performer Ms. D'Manda Martini sings a show tune for bingo players at The SPACE.

Because the stakes were low and everyone was having fun, moments like those became a welcome comedic hiccup throughout the rounds of bingo.

Toward the end of the event, Martini read out raffle winners for those who donated money for the event. Shaymar Higgs, founder and executive director of The SPACE, thanked everyone for coming out to the various Emerald City Pride events. It was invigorating to see the planning pay off with a day full of enthusiasm. Higgs' mother joined in thanking the attendants; in an emotional moment she recalled when Higgs came out to her, and she let him know that she loves and accepts him. Seeing that his community loves and accepts him, too, gives her great joy, she said.

Those who are 21 or older and can attend the next Drag Bingo event in Greenbelt, can catch Martini at the New Deal Café every third Thursday evening. For those looking forward to taking part in the next LGBTQIA+ events across Greenbelt, Higgs recommends marking October 11 for National Coming Out Day.

City's Vision Zero Application Follows International Trend

by Cathie Meetre and Anna Bedford-Dillow

A grant application to fund a Vision Zero study in Greenbelt was mentioned in the News Review's April 18 issue in coverage of the city's budget. At that time staff were preparing for the Vision Zero grant application, "modeled after an international effort to achieve zero fatalities and serious injuries on the roads by 2030."

Objectives

Vision Zero originated in Sweden, sparked by an accident in 1995 in which five young people died when their car hit the concrete base of a street light after skidding on a turn in rainy weather. The objective of Vision Zero is to eliminate road deaths or serious injuries to both car riders and pedestrians. While this may seem like pie in the sky given the approximately 43,000

U.S. road fatalities in 2021, participating Baltic countries see tantalizing evidence that it's possible. In 2019, both Helsinki and Oslo (cities of about 1.3 to 1.5 million people) had zero pedestrian fatalities and in Oslo just one driver died. In comparison, Dallas, Texas, also has about 1.3 million people, and between 2016 and 2020 there were 286 pedestrian fatalities, over 70 per year. Greenbelt is tiny in comparison, but has also had its share of fatalities: around three per year.

A New Perspective

The shift in thinking is that it isn't just drivers who need to step up to safe driving – obey the rules, not drink and drive and so on – it also is the authorities who design and build roads who need to design to minimize the destruction that takes place when drivers or pedestrians blunder. Vision Zero makes the point that in air and train transportation, providers of the infrastructure must obey stringent requirements about the safety built into their infrastructure. Road transportation, however, lays the blame on the users of the transportation system when there are accidents – and barely considers the risk involved in the physical layout of the roads.

Shared Responsibility

Fire Dept. Staffing Plan 'Temporary', ALS Ambulance to be at Greenbelt

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

"You have to have conversations that are affecting everyone in the open in some form or fashion ... not just telling people, 'We made this decision and it's coming up in three weeks,'" said Takisha James, Mayor of Bladensburg (standing in back, light blue shirt).

Prince George's County Fire Chief Tiffany Green recently announced a plan to reallocate all career firefighters and Emergency Medical Services (EMS) staff at four Prince George's County fire departments: Greenbelt, Berwyn Heights, Bowie-Bel Air and Bunker Hill. The effective date is Sunday, June 30. Since then, the biggest development has been a guarantee of an Advanced Life Support (ALS) ambulance stationed at Greenbelt. "We are staffing a paramedic ambulance that has a paramedic and an EMT on it and that will be stationed for our peak hours from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. seven days a week here at [Greenbelt]," confirmed Prince George's County Deputy Fire Chief James McClelland, speaking in Greenbelt on Wednesday, June 12. "Call volume dramatically increases every day close to 11 o'clock and dies down at 11 p.m. So, during that timeframe we will have an ALS unit here responding to the calls and needs of the town of Greenbelt and the surrounding areas." In addition, a basic ambulance

Emerald City Holds Pride Parade

Pride stickers are handed out as the Pride Parade makes its way down Gardenway.

Last Saturday's Greenbelt Emerald City Pride events kicked off with a morning Pride Parade. At the Spellman Overpass, members of the Greenbelt Honk! Situation made sure their instruments were in tune, and supportive families sporting LGBTQIA+ Pride flags and local political leaders came together. With over 100 people assembled around 11:30 a.m., the event organizers and politicians gave some final remarks. Carla Gordon thanked everyone for showing up and keeping the spirit of Ric Gordon alive. State Senator Alonzo Washington joined her, saying that the swell of people present is proof that the impact of the late city councilmember is still present in the community, as he was a major force behind the annual event. State Delegate Nicole Williams was happy to see Pride being celebrated here, along with many other cities across Maryland. State Delegate Ashanti Martinez spoke to how heartening this event was for him, as the first

Around 11:40 a.m., the parade began its procession down Gardenway with music, flags, banners, streamers, costumes and bubbles. The full assembly was nearly half a block in length,

Letters to the Editor

Thanks for Kind Deed

Today, I was eating lunch at IHOP with a group of fellow retirees – people I worked with, some for many years. We had a nice time, exchanging stories of events long past and making new discoveries about how our paths intersected years before we met each other on the job. We were almost finished when the most amazing thing happened. A group sharing our corner of IHOP was leaving and a child in the group stepped to our table and told one of us they were paying for his lunch in honor of Father’s Day. He was so surprised he may not have fully expressed how much he appreciated that gift. But there was more. After they left, the waitresses told us they had paid for all our meals! Since we did not know who they were, we cannot personally express our gratitude. I hope they can see this note in the Greenbelt News

Review and know we felt truly honored by their generosity.

The Bikeriders

The film captures a rebellious time in America when the culture and people were changing. After a chance encounter at a local bar, strong-willed Kathy (Jodie Comer) is inextricably drawn to Benny (Austin Butler), the newest member of Midwestern motorcycle club the Vandals led by the enigmatic Johnny (Tom Hardy). Much like the country around it, the club begins to evolve, transforming from a gathering place for local outsiders into a dangerous underworld of violence, forcing Benny to choose between Kathy and his loyalty to the club.

I Saw the TV Glow

Teenager Owen is just trying to make it through life in the suburbs when his classmate introduces him to a mysterious late-night TV show, a vision of a supernatural world beneath their own. In the pale glow of the television, Owen’s view of reality begins to crack.

Tuesday

A mother (Julia Louis-Dreyfus, in a moving performance) and her teenage daughter (Lola Petticrew) must confront Death when it arrives in the form of an astonishing talking bird. From debut filmmaker Daina O. Pusić, Tuesday is a heart-rending fairy tale about the echoes of loss and finding resilience in the unexpected. Said New York Times critic Jeannette Catsoulis, “In this fantastical first feature from the Croatian filmmaker Daina O. Pusic, striking special effects and a richly textured sound design lend a cosmic chill to a simple story of maternal grief.”

Nepal America International Film Festival

Sponsored by the Nepal-America Film Society, the festival presents a diverse array of films, encompassing features, documentaries, animations, experimental works and shorts from Nepal, America, South Asia and around the world. Highlights include films from the Global Peace Film Festival Florida in the Special Sidebar Section and a focus on films from Washington, D.C., Maryland and Virginia in the DMV Close-up Section.

In the Mood for Love

In 1962, journalist Chow Mo-wan (Tony Leung Chiu Wai) and his wife move into a Hong Kong apartment, but Chow’s spouse is often away on business. Before long, the lonely Chow makes the acquaintance of the alluring Su Li-zen (Maggie Cheung Man-yuk), whose own significant other also seems preoccupied with work. As the two friends realize their respective partners are cheating on them, they begin to fall for one another; however, neither wants to stoop to the level of the unfaithful spouses.

Trolls Band Together

After being friends, Poppy (Anna Kendrick) and Branch (Justin Timberlake) are now, finally, a couple. As they grow closer, Poppy discovers that Branch has a secret past. He was once part of her favorite boyband phenomenon, BroZone, with his four brothers. BroZone disbanded when Branch was still a baby, as did the family, and Branch hasn’t seen his brothers since. When Branch’s bro Floyd is kidnapped for his musical talents by a pair of nefarious pop-star villains – Velvet and Veneer – Branch and Poppy embark on a harrowing and emotional journey to reunite the other brothers and rescue Floyd from a fate even worse than pop-culture obscurity.

Lillian Dambrauskas

Lillian Mae Dambrauskas

Lillian Mae Dambrauskas died on May 26, 2024, in her Greenbelt home of nearly 60 years, with her children nearby. She was 92.

Lillian was an unassuming hero to her children, her neighbors and to scores of others whose lives she touched through her volunteer work and compassionate caregiving. She was a talented seamstress and an accommodating cook who always made room at the table and in her home for anyone seeking a good meal or friendship.

Born to Lawrence John and Lillian May Dennis on December 9, 1931, in Olney, Md., Lillian was the oldest of four daughters. After graduating from Elkridge High School in 1948, she began working at the U.S. Department of Agriculture. To support her family, she often traveled from Beltsville to Baltimore by Greyhound Bus to a second job at Montgomery Ward.

On June 20, 1953, Lillian married Daniel Dambrauskas. A year later, they bought their first of three homes in Greenbelt. They danced through life together for 67 years – raising three children and helping to raise one grandson – until Daniel’s death in 2020.

Lillian later worked at the National Children’s Center in Laurel and at the University of Maryland College Park Bookstore. Her most cherished work, however, was making custom clothing, costumes and accessories. She also reupholstered sofas and chairs and made curtains for her home and others.

Like many of her generation, Lillian and her sisters made clothing from feed sacks. Her sewing skills were unmatched. Throughout her life, she made clothing in all sizes, sometimes crafting matching outfits for her daughters’ dolls. She designed and created exquisite bridesmaid and wedding dresses for her daughters, nieces and friends.

From Captain Hook to lavish can-can dance skirts, she adorned fabrics, hats and gloves with sequins, feathers and rhinestones, designing and constructing costumes until just a few months before her death. She was the premiere costumier for students of the Eleanor Pernia School of Dance in Beltsville for more than a decade. Lillian also taught sewing to Greenbelt 4-H Club members.

As a volunteer for St. Hugh of Grenoble Catholic Church and School, she tutored young students to improve their literacy skills and helped with school lunches and other school activities. During the 1970s and 1980s, Lillian and Daniel helped raise more than $100,000 for the church by organizing and managing fundraising dances and Thursday night bingo, where Lillian’s homemade sloppy joe sauce reportedly sold out each week. The couple received a plaque in 1983 for their years of service to the church.

Lillian loved playing games with family and friends, and she was an avid duckpin bowler. In 1963, she was filmed for the popular Bowling for Dollars TV program. She also loved hosting Sunday family dinners, sharing any leftovers with the wild animals that graced her yard.

Lillian is survived by her son, Raymond (Louise) of Shepherdstown, W.V.; daughter Donna (Gabriel Iriarte) of Longboat Key, Fla.; daughter Susan of Silver Spring; and grandson Mikhail Iriarte of Longboat Key, Fla. She was preceded in death by her husband Daniel and her sisters Mary Ann (Spioch), Jean Louise (DePriest) and Barbara Joan (Kroll).

Lillian and the remains of her beloved husband will be buried together at Crownsville Veterans Cemetery in a private service on July 1, 2024. To view Lillian’s photo gallery, visit gaschs.com/obituaries/lillian-dambrauskas.

Joyce Lorraine Bates Mangum died in Greenbelt on June 5, 2024. She was born October 28, 1928, in Elmira, N.Y. Her parents, Harry and Winifred Bates, moved the family – Joyce and her two siblings – to Washington, D.C., in the summer of 1937. Soon after that move an opportunity to move to the new town of Greenbelt opened up and they moved in to 13-H Ridge Road in October 1937.

committee that selects the Outstanding Citizen doesn't know everyone in town. Finding that special person in a city full of volunteers requires diverse community input. Tell us about someone you know who contributes to our community!

Every successful nonprofit relies on a team of volunteers. Without volunteers, our many cooperatives could not function. Without dedicated citizens freely giving their time, the City of Greenbelt could not rely on crucial input from advisory boards and committees. Volunteers run youth programs, helping organize sports and scouting programs. Volunteers shuttle senior citizens to medical appointments.

Nominate someone you know by completing the form on this page. Describe contributions to our community, acts of kindness and actions that make Greenbelt better – whether the whole city, a neighborhood or an organization. Nominations are due Monday, July 29. This year's honoree will be the 50th since the award began in 1973. The honoree also serves as Grand Marshal of the Greenbelt Labor Day Parade.

Every Greenbelt resident knows someone who distinguishes themselves with outstanding volunteer service, often without the recognition they deserve. History indicates many Outstanding Citizens were nominated several times before their selection. The committee counts on nominations from the public to identify this person each year, and to ensure Greenbelt's civic traditions grow and flourish into the future.

Maglev Construction: No One Wants It

I do not support this proposed invading monster. It's personal. I live near Greenbelt and it's going to affect my life. Nobody I know wants it. I won't vote for anyone who supports it. I am angry that it is even being considered as a "need." What a waste of 16 or whatever billions of dollars in order to get somewhere 15 minutes faster than Amtrak. It's also not practical. It doesn't serve our community. We can't even get on the thing. And so to the impacts of construction. From what I have read, it will take an estimated 760,000 trips for construction trucks to haul away the mountains of soil during underground tunneling (48 feet wide in diameter) and to bring in construction materials. Where will all this increased truck traffic go, and for how long? Years? What will be the damage/repair costs to our roads? And We Know Who will pay for that ... And as for the generated dust and carbon pollution to choke us and our children, and our plant life? We Know Who will "pay" for that too.

All this construction and mess (and all these billions), just for some to get from D.C. to Baltimore 15 minutes quicker? Seriously?

Carrie Dike

P.S.: While I do not live in Greenbelt, Greenbelt is a huge part of my life: work, play, walk, eat, swim, yoga and more.

Eliminating Fire, Rescue Service Is Dangerous

In an incredibly ill-advised election-year move, our vital county-provided fire and rescue service is threatened with termination within a few weeks. Eliminating this most important service to three of the county's main cities is nuts. Even if it's just a ploy to increase taxes, it's wrong on so many levels. Cut the pork, not the essentials. Our excellent fire and rescue service, county-paid and volunteer-assisted, is the most essential of all.

Last week's News Review headline said that this cut would "double response time." Anybody think that response to fires and heart attacks ought to be delayed?

Last fall I was driving down Beaver Dam Road and stopped to help a motorist stranded over a pile of leaves by the side of the road. As he spun his tires when I tried to push, the leaves ignited and flames shot out all under the engine. I immediately called our Greenbelt Fire Department, who arrived in less than 10 minutes.

During this time the entire car was engulfed in flames. Tires popping, scorched paint and seats melted beyond recognition as the driver and myself stood safely away. The four firefighters, all county employees, expertly and courageously put out the fire. This was before the gas tank might have exploded and perhaps the surrounding forest set ablaze had response been delayed.

Like that fire, this bad decision needs to be reversed quickly before it burns out of control.

Not So Fast: Maglev High-Speed Train Project Has Hit Some Skids

by Jeremy Cox

One of the main selling points for constructing a $13 billion magnet-propelled train line between Washington, D.C., and Baltimore is speed. Proponents envision levitating train cars going 300 miles per hour and faster, reducing the travel time between the two cities to a mere 15 minutes.

But those go-fast ambitions have collided with the go-slow realities of acquiring state and federal permits. The mounting difficulties threaten to derail the high-profile project.

First came the Federal Railroad Administration's (FRA) decision in 2019 to pause the five-year, $28 million study of the project's potential environmental impacts, citing the need for additional engineering and design details. After work on the study restarted, the FRA initiated a second pause in 2021 without finalizing a preferred route.

Nearly three years into the effort's current suspension, an FRA spokeswoman told the Bay Journal in April that "there are no updates available." The study must be completed and federally approved for the project to move forward.

Now comes another wrench in the works: Northeast Maglev, the private company leading the project, withdrew its application in late December for a water-quality certification from the Maryland Department of the Environment (MDE). The move came after MDE indicated it was poised to reject the request, pointing to a bevy of missing details, such as finalized design plans and storm-water discharge totals.

Northeast Maglev didn't make a representative available to comment for this report. But the company has notified MDE that it intends to reapply after it acquires more engineering and design information.

Some environmental groups, including the Chesapeake Climate Action Network, have thrown their support behind the project. They say the high-speed train will result in a net win for the environment by removing millions of polluting car trips from area roadways, leading to improved air quality.

But many conservationists remain opposed. Among them: the Anacostia Watershed Community Advisory Committee, Sierra Club's Maryland chapter, Beaverdam Creek Watershed Watch, the Maryland Ornithological Society and the Friends of Patuxent. They greeted the permit withdrawal announcement with cautious relief.

"We were very excited," said Rhonda Kranz, president of the Maryland Coalition for Responsible Transit, an anti-maglev community group. "We spent so much time going to hearings and writing a 600-page report. They can still come back with this, but I think it was a real win."

Critics have raised myriad objections to the project.

Although the train itself doesn't directly emit greenhouse gases, opponents contend it would still need enormous amounts of electricity derived from fossil fuels. They also take issue with Northeast Maglev's preferred route, which would slice through several federal properties, including portions of the Patuxent Research Refuge. And with an expected average fare price of $60, they say it would be a viable option only for the wealthiest commuters.

"At its core, our big concern with the maglev project is it requires extensive amounts of new infrastructure to do basically the same thing that MARC [Maryland Area Rail Commuter] and Amtrak are currently doing," said

PGCPS to Shut Down SchoolMAX, Will Transition to Synergy in July

by Anna Bedford-Dillow

SchoolMAX is used by parents and students to access their grades, enrollment details and other student data.

This summer, Prince George’s County Public Schools (PGCPS) will shut down SchoolMAX, the Student Information System (SIS) and parent portal they’ve been using for 15 years, and transition to a new system called Synergy. Between June 30 and July 22, all information from SchoolMAX will be transferred into Synergy and both systems will be unavailable, said PGCPS in a statement.

On June 13, PGCPS announced that the SchoolMAX Family Portal will be accessible until June 22 for families to review grades and report cards are scheduled to be mailed out the week of July 8. SchoolMAX will be inaccessible after June 22 and families will receive information about enrolling in its replacement, the Synergy ParentVue portal, starting in July.

PGCPS announced in January that they had selected the Synergy Education Platform for the district’s SIS and learning management needs. The school district has used SchoolMAX since 2008 but in the superintendent’s recommendation to the Board of Education in the fall, SchoolMAX was described as an aging system “unable to keep pace with advancements and innovations” and a challenge to integrate with newer systems, namely Canvas.

“However, SchoolMAX is now aging out in terms of its usefulness and is occurring across schools, departments and public education more broadly. Specifically, integrations with new systems, such as Canvas, have become increasingly challenging due to the aging nature of the SchoolMAX application and the platform on which it was originally built,” said the superintendent’s recommendation. “Trends in education and user needs have tested the limits of our current student information system, particularly in a post-pandemic digital learning environment.”

In 2022 PGCPS adopted Canvas as their Learning Management System (LMS). A Greenbelt public school teacher told the News Review that Canvas had never been successfully compatible with SchoolMAX. A Greenbelt parent said their child’s assignments were difficult to track across the two systems – Canvas being the place students complete work and SchoolMAX being the official repository for sharing grades.

PGCPS evaluated three products in-depth based on “user friendliness, mobile responsiveness, system accessibility and scalability, software customization, integration with other systems and communication.” An announcement from Synergy’s parent company, Edupoint, said PGCPS praised Synergy’s “functionality around scheduling, data analysis and reporting.” PGCPS’ recommendation said Synergy consistently earned the highest marks from stakeholder evaluators.

PGCPS secured $4.5 million through the Elementary and Secondary School Emergency Relief Fund (ESSER) to cover two years of costs of the new SIS. ESSER is part of a federal stimulus package in response to the pandemic. “This funding will cover the initial purchase for Fiscal Year (FY) 2024 (year 1), the annual license renewal for FY 2025 (year 2), plus related startup implementation costs such as data migration, integration and training over the entirety of the first two years of the system implementation,” states the recommendation. “About $5.5 million will be expended in FY 2024, and another

$5.5 million will be expended at the beginning of FY 2025 for annual software renewal fees. After the ESSER funding expires, we will need to add funding to the operating budget in FY 2026 to sustain our software licensing for critical technology applications currently covered by ESSER funding,” said the administration in a written response to board members’ questions.

The five-year implementation plan estimates costs as follows:

- Year One/FY 2024: $1,746,620
- Year Two/FY 2025: $2,637,893
- Year Three/FY 2026: $2,497,431
- Year Four/FY 2027: $2,572,355
- Year Five/FY 2028: $2,649,526.

The plan suggests that after ESSER funds are exhausted, beginning in FY 2026, the school district will need to cover an estimated $2.5 million in costs associated with the new system.

Gov. Moore Signs Two Bills Impacting Funds for Education

by Randy Chow

On May 16, Governor Wes Moore signed into law two bills that reportedly may decrease funding to Prince George’s County schools. The legislation will go into effect on July 1.

Currently, most of the tax revenue from telecommunications and energy/fuel are earmarked for the county’s education budget. After the passage of House Bill (HB) 396, county funds from sales and use tax on energy/fuel will no longer be earmarked for education. “Local appropriation for the county school system may decrease by $53.2 million in Fiscal Year (FY) 2025 and by $64.7 million in FY 2029,” according to HB 396’s fiscal note.

In addition, passage of HB 398 removes the education earmarks on telecommunication tax revenue. HB 398’s fiscal note reports that Prince George’s County local appropriation for its county school system “may decrease by $13.1 million in FY 2025 and by $16.0 million by FY 2029.”

In March, Greenbelt city councilmembers unanimously opposed the two bills.

City Council Holds Last Hearing On Budget, Discusses ARPA Funds

by Carol Griffith

On May 29, the Greenbelt City Council made two proclamations, conducted the last public hearing of Fiscal Year (FY) 2025 proposed budget and received updates on the Bureau of Engraving and Printing facility and American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA) funding. In his administrative report, City Manager Josué Salmerón addressed the “challenging” state of the indoor pool at the Aquatic & Fitness Center, the status of the Charlestowne North apartments and Advisory Committee on Education (ACE) awards. Approval of purchases for the Greenbelt Police Department and Public Works made during this meeting was covered in an article in the June 13 issue.

Proclamations

Council proclaimed May as Jewish American Heritage Month, accepted by Karen Knee, and the week of June 1 through 9 as Chesapeake Bay Awareness Week, with Kevin Carpenter-Driscoll, Public Works environmental coordinator, accepting.

FY 2025 Budget

The meeting was then recessed for a second and last public hearing on the FY 2025 proposed budget. Following nine worksessions on the budget and a previous public hearing, the budget was adopted at the council meeting on Monday, June 3. Caitlin McGrath, executive director of Greenbelt Cinema, thanked council for considering the Cinema’s request for a large increase in its stipend and resident Michael Hartman thanked staff and council for its work on the FY 2025 budget process. Franklin Park resident Kevin Lockhart requested council assistance for the Greenbelt S.I.T.Y. (Sensational, Inspirational, Talented Youth) Stars, a jump rope team. He reminded council that the team is scheduled to go to Japan for a competition and asked for help with equipment, noting the group had made a presentation to council in an earlier worksession. Resident Bill Orleans requested a change in how updates to the proposed budget are tracked and communicated. Salmerón responded, saying that one change Orleans requested was not feasible but that all changes to the proposed budget were posted online. Orleans also requested that should any ARPA funds be undesignated at the end of the process, they be given to Greenbelt CARES. Salmerón responded that he would explore that option should the conditions arise.

Assistant Planning Director Jaime Fearer updated council on the recent Environmental Assessment (EA) the Bureau of Engraving and Printing has published concerning transportation, utility usage and construction at the proposed Beltsville facility. Public comments are due June 21 and she has drafted a letter to the U.S. Army Corp of Engineers expressing the city’s concerns about the transportation plan, the most important issue. Mayor Emmett Jordan voiced his concern that the Baltimore-Washington Parkway would be utilized for construction traffic rather than the routes listed in the EA. Fearer stated she would draft a communication expressing the city’s position on the project’s transportation plan and send it to council for approval.

ARPA Update

Assistant City Manager Timothy George provided council with an update on ARPA funds. Funding is distributed nearly equally between the three areas of the city. He has received more applications for grants recently. George plans to have all funds obligated by the end of November. In response to a question by Jordan about recent Greenbelt high school graduates needing financial aid for college, George reported that approximately $50,000 is available and he has informed the school principals and PTAs of the Greenbelt schools of the availability.

Greenbelt Pool

Salmerón told council that he had received updated information on the extent of repairs needed on the deck of the indoor pool and was awaiting an estimate of the cost of the repairs. The timeline he was provided shows that the pool may be closed for up to one year. He is aware of the impact to patrons of such a long closure and will try to mitigate the impact. Salmerón said he hoped to be able to use ARPA funds for the project. In response to questioning by Councilmember Silke Pope, he said he would issue press releases, website updates and items in the News Review to keep residents updated on the status of the project.

Charlestowne North

Salmerón said that, based on a recent inspection, he has issued a temporary rental license to the new owners of Charlestowne North apartments pending another inspection in August, adding that the owners are in compliance with the agreement with the city.

Kyle Hart, Mid-Atlantic program manager for the National Parks Conservation Association.

The train’s special U-shaped guideway would run mostly through tunnels bored up to 320 feet below the surface. About 70 percent of the 40-mile route would be underground, but it would emerge above ground as much as 150 feet overhead along “viaducts” perched on concrete piers. The service would operate between dedicated new stations at Mount Vernon Square in D.C. and the Cherry Hill neighborhood in Baltimore, with a single stop at Baltimore-Washington International Airport.

Japan, which pioneered maglev technology in the 1970s, has pledged $5 billion toward the U.S. construction project. Backers hope to eventually extend the route to New York City. A full trip between there and D.C., roughly 200 miles, would take just an hour, they say.

Maryland’s water-quality certification process is triggered whenever a new project is expected to discharge polluted stormwater into waterways protected by the federal Clean Water Act. Northeast Maglev’s permit application identifies seven Chesapeake Bay tributaries to be affected, including the Anacostia, Little Patuxent and Severn Rivers.

The project would require about 450 acres of trees to be cleared. About 22 acres of wetlands and nearly 13,000 linear feet of streams would be impacted. Northeast Maglev told MDE it would use state-approved treatment practices during construction and in the installation of stormwater facilities to ensure that the discharges meet water-quality standards.

In a December 22 letter to Northeast Maglev, Danielle Spendiff, head of MDE’s regulatory division, wrote that even after receiving additional details from Northeast Maglev, the agency still “does not have a reasonable assurance that this project will comply with water quality standards.”

She pointed to several flaws in the developer’s request. Those included that the project’s layout remains conceptual, efforts to address floodwaters with underground storage may be “challenging or infeasible,” and there are scant details on how sensitive species, such as freshwater mussels, will be impacted.

Less than a week later, Northeast Maglev notified the agency that it was pulling the application but would “reapply when the project documents are detailed enough to address MDE’s comments.”

Spendiff replied that “it is strongly recommended (although not required)” that Northeast Maglev wait until the federal environmental impact study resumes and there is more certainty surrounding the preferred route.

“I read that as, ‘Please don’t waste our resources,’” said Dan Woomer, a past president of the Coalition for Responsible Transit. His organization, he added, supports enhancements to MARC, Amtrak and other public transportation options to help relieve the region’s congestion.

It is unclear when or if the federal environmental impact study will restart. The effort has run out of federal funding, and any further work would require additional outlays, said Nora Corasaniti of the Maryland Department of Transportation in a September 2023 email to State Delegate Nicole A. Williams of Prince George’s County, who had requested an update on the project.

Celebrating Young Thinkers And Leaders Making Change

by Julia Snyder

On Saturday, June 15, the Prince George’s County Lynching Memorial Project and the Greenbelt Black History and Culture Committee hosted the third annual Racial Justice Essay and Creative Arts Award Ceremony at the Community Center. The entries included essays, creative writing and visual arts. They were all works that shed light on historical or present-day racial injustice. There were student awardees from seven different Prince George’s County public high schools. Mikayla Hollis from Eleanor Roosevelt High School won third place in the Creative Writing category for her essay titled The School to Prison Pipeline, which her mom read for the crowd.

Janelle Bassole of Laurel High School was the first-place winner in the Essay Writing category, for her essay titled A Practice Built off the Back of Suffering about the origins of modern gynecology. Her essay, which she read to the crowd, explained how various medical practices used today were developed through experiments done on enslaved Black women. She also linked this topic to medical disparities that People of Color continue to face in the United States. Emanuella Umoh of College Park Academy also read her second-place winning essay about the importance of representation, titled The Power of Representation: Illuminating Paths to Racial Justice Through Media. Jaelynn Walker of Chesapeake Math and IT Academy North High School won second place in the Visual Arts category for her work Bars of Freedom, which was a rendition of the American Flag. Marli Jones of Frederick Douglass High School sent a video of her reading her essay titled The Pipeline. Neil Hardigan, a teacher in Prince George’s County, presented the awards. The awardees won scholarships totaling $4,000.

This essay and creative arts contest is held each year by the Prince George’s County Lynching Memorial Project, whose mission is to “educate the public about the truths of our nation’s continuing legacy of the institution of slavery and its impact on enslaved persons and their descendants.” Part of this goal is to begin to heal deep wounds by telling the truth about racial history in Prince George’s County. As Lula Beatty of the Lynching Memorial project explained, we must “work together as one united Prince George’s County [to create justice that is equal for all of us.]” She continued to explain that these are “issues that matter to the grandmas like me but also to the children” who are the future. This contest is about supporting young voices because they are the leaders in making change.

Both local citizens and their representatives came out to celebrate the student awardees and their families. Lois Rosado gave the introduction and talked about Greenbelt and its historic nature and pride in its spirit of cooperation. Greenbelt City Councilmembers Danielle McKinney, Jenni Pompei, Kristen Weaver and Amy Knesel attended the event, will be stationed at Bunker Hill in Brentwood, near the D.C. border. “We are not going to leave these areas unprotected,” said McClelland. “We realize the service that needs to be provided and we are going to provide it.”

The hall of the Greenbelt Fire Department was filled for the monthly, countywide meeting. “It was quiet at the beginning of the month. Unfortunately, that didn’t last,” quipped President of the Prince George’s County Volunteer Fire and Rescue Association Lee Lutz in his opening comments. “The Chief has issued a new summer staffing plan. The career personnel will be removed from station [8]55, station [8]14, station [8]35 and station [8]39. This was done, according to the chief, to accommodate the leave problems that they’re going to encounter this summer when everybody takes vacation.... We’re probably 80 percent EMS calls in this county and that’s going to leave a pretty big hole on that part of the county EMS-wise. She thinks that the volunteers should be able to step up and help cover it, however there are surge units they’re going to apply to help out with the EMS part of the problem and there is one paramedic engine,” said Lutz. “I know as the association we never, never want to see career staff removed from any station in this county. However, we weren’t really given a choice. I was notified about this I believe Thursday of last week [June 6].” Career and volunteer personnel staffing are both down in the county, Lutz said, and he expressed the hope that folks could get together to devise a better plan.

“I’m not happy with that at all, either,” said Prince George’s County Volunteer Fire and Rescue Association’s First Vice President Donnie Wells. Wells echoed that 80 percent of calls were for EMS. He is with the Bladensburg Volunteer Fire Department. “I am one of the volunteer houses that gets hit, and I see how my guys are already stressed,” said Wells of the volume of calls placed on volunteers and he predicted things would get worse. “Stress factors are gonna get high.... Right now we don’t have an option. We don’t have a choice.”

“Luckily we don’t have to worry about them taking all ours out ‘cause they already did,” said Second Vice President William Cunningham, dryly, during his report. Cunningham is with Richie Volunteer Fire Department, which is also an all-volunteer station.

Green was out of town and unavailable for the meeting. In her stead Deputy Fire Chief McClelland talked about the summer staffing plan. For three years career and volunteer corporations and departments have struggled with membership, he told the crowd. “Prince George’s Fire and EMS Department for the career side is short 251 firefighters,” said McClelland. He spoke to the “physical and mental impact” on the career firefighters who have had significant mandatory overtime each summer for the last three years and haven’t gone home to families and children at the ends of their shifts. He acknowledged the impact on volunteers, too. “The Prince George’s County government has authorized the largest hiring in its history,” McClelland announced. “We are hiring 150 uniform firefighters in this budget cycle and

Point of View

Time Is Life: EMTs Matter

by Jennifer Harris

I was aghast to read that our trained emergency medical staff is being ripped away from our community. My husband acquired a seizure disorder in 1991 from a ruptured AVM. You would know what that stands for if you were an EMT.

When deciding where to put down roots, we were tempted to live in a more rural setting. But we knew that my husband could need urgent, lifesaving help quickly. We chose Greenbelt because of the community and also the proximity to the fire department

Anyone can acquire a seizure disorder. People who experience seizures can live full and fulfilling lives, but injuries are part of the routine, the scene.

Both Greenbelt Medics and Berwyn heroes have rescued my husband from the scythe of the Grim Reaper.

Our first visit from the walking angels was in 2001 when my husband went into status epilepticus for the first time. Status is when the person has one seizure after the other or is in a continuous seizure state. It’s super terrifying to see because breathing is interrupted or irregular. It’s about as close as you can get to watching someone drown. It’s deadly if the person does not get lifesaving therapies in an ER.

Like drowning, minutes and seconds matter. Lifesaving medications start with the EMTs in the house, right away. Then the patient is rushed to the resuscitation unit in the ER for more intravenous medication.

Time, time, time. It’s all about time.

Bill has suffered from Status three times since then. Each time I called 911, and within minutes, he was literally carried out of his home and into lifesaving hands by these amazing, dedicated, generous, smart and caring heroes.

That’s not all, folks.

In May 2020, I came home from a short trip to the Co-op Supermarket. I found him conscious, but on the ground, with his knee going in an impossible angle not in line with his hips. He had broken his leg, falling from a standing position while getting a shirt out of the closet.

Within minutes, there was a highly trained bunch of medics levitating him down the stairs and into their saving-grace care. A surgeon was right there at the Prince George’s County hospital to repair him so he could live and walk again. Minutes mattered.

When he had a heart attack that same summer while recovering from his broken leg adventure, minutes mattered again without a doubt. The EMTs knew they had a heart attack situation because they had an EKG on deck with people who knew their stuff, and they got a reading on site which whipped them into motion. They got him into their vehicle and administered medication right away as they were speeding across town.

I am heartbroken for the EMTs and their families. This is going to mean they can’t get to people in serious distress quickly. Those patients are going to be worse off and have fatal outcomes in some cases, simply because the authorities have decided that we don’t deserve professional emergency services. That is so terribly unfair. This will lead to a basic job dissatisfaction with the impossible parameters of time and outcomes. And then we lose these people altogether.

The people who made this decision need to go with these folks on a few missions. Ask them some questions. Listen to how they feel about their own future in the Hometown Heroes Force. Listen to what they need, each and every one of the 24 people who are here for us.

Policy should be made from the ground up by people who are listening to the experts, the workers. They deserve the tools to perform their miracles. Time is an essential tool of the lifesaving trades.

As a caregiver, I am in a heightened state of worry. I used to comfort myself with the thought that, “at least help is just a few blocks away.”

Please, let us keep our EMTs. Jennifer Harris has been a resident of Greenbelt for 25 years.

Greenbelt Man Is Convicted Of Deputy's Attempted Murder

by Jessica Thompson

A Calvert County jury convicted Brandon Alexander Turner, 22, of Greenbelt with attempted first-degree murder of Master Deputy Sheriff James Flynt. The jury also convicted Turner of first-degree assault on Deputies Anthony Aranda and Tyler Bowen, as well as illegal use of a firearm in connection with these offenses. The verdicts were returned on the evening of June 11, 2024, following a seven-day trial.

On December 17, 2022, Turner stopped his vehicle on Md. Route 4 near Yellow Bank Road in Dunkirk. When deputies approached the vehicle, Turner fled, leading police on an eight-mile pursuit at speeds in excess of 100 miles per hour. During the chase, Turner fired multiple shots at the deputies. The chase ended near the Walnut Creek subdivision when Flynt was able to force Turner's vehicle to crash. Flynt exited his vehicle and ordered Turner to drop his gun.

Turner fired two shots, striking Flynt in the right leg, severing his femoral artery. Due to extraordinary life-saving measures by Sheriff's deputies, EMTs, Paramedic Adam Weiss and ER staff at Calvert Health Medical Center, Flynt survived. Turner was apprehended after he fled and was found hiding in the woods.

Sentencing is scheduled on October 11, 2024, before the Honorable Andrew S. Rappaport. Turner is facing a sentence well in excess of life imprisonment.

This case was prosecuted by Calvert County State's Attorney Robert Harvey and Deputy State's Attorney Timothy Maher.

Jessica Thompson is in the Calvert County State's Attorney's office.

Editor's note: Turner's criminal history includes assault, firearm use in a violent crime, theft and handgun offenses. Court records show Turner has lived in Greenbelt since at least 2022.

currently have 32 graduates graduating recruitment school on July 16 and have just started 53 more recruit firefighters.”

Of the summer staffing plan, McClelland said, “First and foremost I want to tell you it is based on the physical and mental impact on the members that are providing the service. Last year alone career uniform firefighters worked over 21,000 mandatory overtime hours just in the months of May and June. That’s just May and June. It was projected to double that this summer. I cannot look my members in the face and say you are not going home to your families. I can’t do that anymore and the chief recognized that as well.” McClelland said he was happy they were “getting the people” and noted the long training period. “It’s going to take us time,” he said, citing an average of 30 weeks to get new firefighters and EMTs “out on the streets” and training requirements keep growing.

“This is a temporary plan. I’m going to say it again. It is a temporary plan. We realize people are worried. ‘When I call 911 are we going to show up?’ The answer is yes. I’m going to say it again. Yes.” McClelland asserted, “These people are not being reassigned; they are detailed to reduce the mandatory callback times that we foresee for the summer.” Yet, in the Fire Chief’s letter to Greenbelt City Manager Josué Salmerón, dated June 7, Green used the term “reallocation” throughout and called the plan “a temporary summer staffing reallocation.” McClelland spoke of the call volume that is “dramatically increasing,” which is a challenge to manage with their resources. Each day, they will be moving units to different areas based on where the need is. “This is a team effort,” he said. “I realize that these decisions are not easy, they’re not comfortable,” acknowledged McClelland, while promising to provide service to all areas. “If I see that things need to be adjusted, we will make those adjustments.” The plan will be re-evaluated “through the months” and response data will be shared with officials, said McClelland.

Response

Mayor Takisha James of Bladensburg said the decisions felt “very, very last minute” and left no time for preparation. There was no time for other conversations or compromise, she complained. “Were you in conversation with the volunteers about this in advance?” she asked, to which the room at large responded with a chorus of “No!”. “You have to have conversations that are affecting everyone in the open in some form or fashion ... not just telling people, ‘We made this decision and it’s coming up in three weeks.’”

“Understood ... Yes. We all could admit that communications could be better,” McClelland said, to laughter. “The end result is, I’m here now.”

“I just hope that it changes,” said James, to which he replied, “I hope so, too, ma’am.” Mount Rainier Councilmember Danielle Carter asked if the county would allow folks to serve as EMS only rather than requiring they also be willing to serve as firefighters. McClelland said that was on the table. “I don’t understand how the career [personnel] keeps lacking and the budget keeps going up,” said Carter, to which McClelland responded that there were challenges with recruitment on both sides nationwide.

Greenbelt Councilmember Rodney Roberts asked, “So, how am I supposed to feel good that my community here, my constituents that I have to worry about, are going to be protected after 11 o’clock at night and if they’re going to have to wait for apparatus to come from another community? How is that protecting my community? And I understand you might have numbers, but I see the results. When I’m here at night, I see them trucks comin’ and goin’ and comin’ and goin’.... So, I want better than what you’re offering.” His comments were met with applause. McClelland responded that when they see that demand they would move a unit so it is sitting there, though it might not be a Greenbelt unit. “Like I said, we’re doing this just to get through the summer,” he reiterated.

Questions from the News Review

County Fire/EMS Public Information Officer Alan Doubleday Responds

Q: If money for overtime was in the budget until a week and a half ago, is there an amount you’re expecting to save by these measures?

A: I don’t have that number on me. Honestly, it’s not about money.... [In Fiscal Year (FY) 2024] we exceeded $30 million just in overtime. One hundred fifty new firefighters are being hired in FY 2025, 32 firefighters who have just completed recruit school and 53 that started recruit school two weeks ago.

Q: Are budgetary savings in overtime expected to go toward paying new recruits?

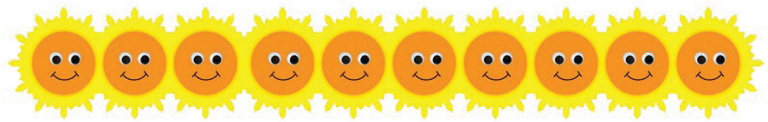

A: The budget’s a difficult thing to talk about. I’m not a specialist in the budget.... We can only hire as many positions as we’re allocated in the county budget. They request the ability to hire as many firefighters as they can and then the county administration approves the number, which was recently increased from 100 to 150. The Alsobrooks administration really sees the need to hire the public safety employees.

Q: Can we expect career firefighters to return to Greenbelt?

A: That is our plan once the summer staffing is done. That will be evaluated on a monthly basis and a daily basis. They’re constantly moving and redeploying assets daily, based on GPS technology and which units are closest to needs. It wasn’t possible to split crews and pull only part of the career staff from Greenbelt, or use volunteer staff in lieu of career staff.

Q: Is removing career staff from adjacent departments like Greenbelt and Berwyn Heights at the same time creating a “hole”?

A: Berwyn Heights is already covering the area with volunteers 75 percent of the time (3 p.m. to 7 a.m. Monday through Friday and all weekend). Berwyn Heights has 109 active volunteers and only a complement of six career personnel. Everyone is going to be picking up in their call volume. The county is only getting busier. We’re running nearly 600 responses a day.... It’s not going to be significant for any one station.... All of our communities are always covered, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365. Due to the busy system, fire trucks from any city could be in any given location responding to calls and the next town over covering their city while their trucks are out. They move where they’re needed.

making impacts across Europe, says that if roads are designed for idealized drivers who don’t make mistakes, then they will be inherently dangerous because it is inevitable that drivers will blunder. It seeks to share responsibility with local authorities, asking that they actively minimize the risks to road users arising from the transportation infrastructure itself – keeping solid objects back from travel lanes, calming traffic, narrowing or removing lanes to dampen speeds and separating different classes of road user.

Swedish authorities focus on strategies that limit damage, addressing solid obstructions close to roads, the hazards and blind spots of pedestrian crossings and the mayhem that results if a vehicle crosses into opposing traffic. While vehicles may have become safer – with safety belts, infant car seats, rollover protection, lane guidance and airbags to name a few advances – the environment they drive in has become, if anything, more dangerous. There are more cars on the road, more traffic lights and intersections and more high-speed roads.

Progress is Uneven

Progress isn’t perfect. In the U.K., for example, an attempt to create a standard 20 mph speed limit in urban and suburban areas caused a ruckus and was derailed. However, research shows that in congested areas, lower speed limits actually result in faster travel times because they reduce traffic snarls and delays resulting from overtaking, stop-start traffic and fender-benders. It’s that old parable of the tortoise and the hare again.

Greenbelt’s Roads

Greenbelt is only responsible for part of its roads, with the county and state both having sovereignty over the more major routes and each authority with its own ideas. Nonetheless, Vision Zero has the potential to increase safety for Greenbelt residents, especially if pursued collaboratively by all stakeholders. At the time of the April 3 budget worksession at which it was discussed, staff were preparing a grant for federal funding of a “Comprehensive Safety Action Plan” that would be Greenbelt’s Vision Zero action plan.

Greenbelt’s Action Plan

Speaking to the News Review, Greenbelt’s Assistant Director of Planning Jaime Fearer said the city has applied for $200,000 in funding and plans to match it with $50,000 if awarded (there is a 20 percent match requirement for the grant). The grant funds would be used for “planning demonstration and supplemental planning.” That means that they will be used to develop the Vision Zero Action Plan for the city and create pilots and demonstrations to inform the planning process. For example, quick build demonstration projects could use stripplage, signage and flexible posts, but wouldn’t involve pouring asphalt or a full rebuild of roads.

Another aspect, part of the “supplemental planning,” would be a health equity assessment. The city would like to start looking at transportation and infrastructure through a health equity lens, said Fearer. With the grant they’d begin gathering baseline data to better understand health outcomes of residents across the city and how transportation might impact that. That would include reducing fatalities and injury but also could include questions of mobility and access.

If awarded, the completion of a certified action plan (something required before implementation funds can be applied for) is expected to take about two years, based on averages elsewhere. Informed by data from the planning process, and with the required certified plan, the city might then apply for implementation funds for a full capital project, possibly from the same federal funding source. Fearer notes that it’s a city goal to create a Vision Zero Action Plan. The city expects to hear back about the grant by August but hopes it might be sooner.

A recent article on the BBC.com website gives details about Vision Zero that may be of interest to Greenbelters: bbc.com/future/article/20240517-vision-zero-how-europe-cut-the-number-of-people-dying-on-its-roads.

Joyce, the youngest daughter, along with older sister Doris and middle brother Richard (Dick), attended Greenbelt Center School and Greenbelt High School. It was during elementary school she received the name “little bits” as a moniker for her size.

Gymnastics and chorus were two of her early pastimes. During high school, while World War II was in full swing, kids of that day were taught plane spotting as a skill that helped the war effort at home. Upon graduation in June 1946, she entered the workforce at the Veterans Administration.

It was there she met and married Leonard Edward Mangum of Bladensburg on October 4, 1947, in Hyattsville. They moved from 13 Court to raise a family, then shuttled around various Greenbelt apartments and the Hollywood subdivision of College Park.

As the Mangum family grew, they moved back to 13 Court, unit R, with their two sons, Terry and Randall. There they welcomed three more children, Diane, Bruce and Douglas into the fold. Joyce then became a beacon of light and love to all the neighborhood, adults and children alike. Her open-door hospitality and concern mirrored her parents who remained across the court from where she grew up. As her husband fulfilled his role as provider outside the home, Joyce provided the role of mother, homemaker, teacher, nurse, disciplinarian, cook, friend and neighbor, centered inside the home.

Outside the home she volunteered at Mowatt Memorial United Methodist Church. She helped with electioneering, provided encouragement at the local ballfields rooting for her kids and their friends. During this time, her parents relocated to Tampa, Fla., where the family went to visit every other year. After her parents became ill, she and her husband traveled to be their caregivers until their last days.

One of Joyce’s biggest tests in life was that of taking care of her oldest son after an automobile accident where he was critically injured and wheelchair-bound as a paraplegic. She nursed him back to health. As the house became an empty nest, Joyce became more and more involved in the Methodist Church women’s ministry, both locally and nationally. She became treasurer as well as holding other offices. She volunteered with Meals On Wheels and then became caregiver to her husband when he fell ill. In January 1994, the love of her life died after years of the hospice care she provided.

Joyce found herself living alone for the very first time in her life at the age of 65. She then transitioned as a widow by continuing to volunteer at church and in the neighborhood. It seems that is when her lifelong love of games and camaraderie kicked in. She was very competitive and loved playing cards and dominoes and other board games with anyone wishing to learn or perfect their skills. She loved puzzles, both jigsaw and crosswords, and watching TV game shows with her family and neighbors. Joyce also organized a court movie night (musicals and romances) which branched out to more than one night a week as they then would also watch TV shows about renovating and home makeovers. She spoke wonderfully about the opportunity to work at Linens and Things in Greenway Center as she became a valuable member of the workforce into her 70s.

Joyce was a terrific baker, which came from a love of chocolate and sweets that was passed on to her children through cookies, pies and cakes. Though Joyce started out as a shy and introverted child and newlywed, she soon became a voice of acceptance and welcoming throughout her years as the matriarch of the Mangums and their 13 Court residence.

She lost many of her friends, classmates, neighbors, church congregants and relatives and felt the pain of loneliness as well as arthritis as she aged. Occasionally she made new friends and continued to thrive into her 90s.

Joyce was most comfortable taking care of others and making sure they got what they needed. She was selfless and giving, both financially, emotionally and with her time. If one dropped by on any given day, she would find time to have both short and long conversations while sharing stories, but mostly listening. She said one of her favorite things was to see children playing around the neighborhood. Joyce brought a lot of joy to a lot of people. She spent her last days perfectly as she was diagnosed with congestive heart failure and kidney failure. She stated, “I got old all of a sudden,” after this diagnosis.

Wanting to remain in her house until her last days, family brought her home with support from hospice. Joyce was able to see her youngest son’s second marriage, mustering up strength to attend in person and captivating all those in attendance with her smile and kind words. Celebrating her birthdays in 2018 (90) and last October in 2023 (95), will remain a highlight and joyful memory of Joyce’s incredible life journey. She served her God well, she loved her husband deeply and cherished and nurtured her children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren with a vast amount of love and attention.

ERHS 2024 Graduate Athletes Finish High School Career, Look to Their Future Goals

by Patrick Gleason

With the 2023-24 school year now finished, the high school athletic scene turns to summer practices and leagues to prepare student athletes for next year. While current high schoolers anticipate the challenges and triumphs of the coming seasons, recent graduates are set to begin new academic and athletic journeys. Eleven Eleanor Roosevelt High School (ERHS) football players will build on their successful senior season – which ended in the state semifinals – by playing collegiately. Luis Arias and Donte Howard will remain together at Bowie State University, while Robert Payton and Xavier George both selected West Liberty University. The other Raiders with college commitments are Charles Barros III (Salisbury University), Favor Bate (Merrimack College), Cole Johnson (Shaw University), Charles Beckwith III (Catholic University), Amarch Dammeh (Susquehanna University), Tristan Doy (Saint Vincent College) and Maurice McFarland (Keystone University).

Although none of the graduating ERHS girls soccer players have elected to play collegiately, they will be continuing their academic careers at an impressive array of schools, both in and out of state. Kaia Booker and Alicia Galban will be attending the University of Maryland, College Park, where Booker will be in the Scholars program, while Galban intends to study public health. Captain Victoria Obisesan will study biochemistry and molecular biology at University of Maryland, Baltimore County, while Angel Ngwane will pursue criminal justice at Towson University. Out of state, Olivia Gills selected Coastal Carolina while also choosing a criminal justice major. Azaria Muhammad will attend Syracuse University and major in public relations and Riley Rios chose Temple University where she will enter in a pre-law track. Finally, manager Mia Maniece – also a member of the ERHS softball team – elected to study photography at Savannah College of Art and Design. These Roosevelt graduates are poised to build on their senior success both on the field and in the classroom.

dancing, singing and playing music as the group made its way to Roosevelt Center. The march was an opportunity for residents to show off their musical and crafting talents, and also to share their pride as a part of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, Intersex and Asexual community. Drag performers handed out Pride stickers to the audience that formed to watch from the sidewalk and parents wore shirts showing their pride as parents of their LGBTQIA+ children.

Greenbelt Honk! Situation kept everyone in step with their eclectic mix of instruments, from traditional ones like drums, brass and woodwinds to the unconventional, like washboards and whisks. When the parade needed to slow down to keep everyone together, the band would change the tempo and dance in place. Everyone was spirited from the rhythm, motion and vibrancy as they made their way to the center of Historic Greenbelt.

As the parade reached Roosevelt Center, the paraders mixed with the crowd. Because spirits were so high, instead of wrapping up the Greenbelt Honk! Situation gave a musical encore.

Springhill Lake Elem. Students Enjoy a Year of Creative Fun

by Rebecca Squire

As the school year winds to a close, Springhill Lake Elementary School (SHLES) students can look back on a year-long series of creative arts experiences, in addition to their academic achievements and personal milestones. Greenbelt Recreation Arts instructors enjoyed working with the students twice a month in conjunction with the afterschool program at the Springhill Lake Recreation Center (SHLRC) headed by Coordinators Brian Butler and Frank Jones.

Students enjoyed a wide variety of visual arts projects, funded with a grant from the Anacostia Trails Heritage Area that was authored by Arts Education Specialist Anne Gardner. Students hand-built festive clay pumpkins in the fall with ceramics instructor Judy Goldberg-Strassler. Leah Cohen taught the students to create mandalas for Diwali, the festival of lights celebrated broadly by members of the South Asian diaspora. Winter projects included ceramic penguins with Goldberg-Strassler and building model igloos with Caitlyn McGillen. Ali Everett, who teaches for Greenbelt Recreation Arts as part of a partnership with the Greenbelt Access Television (GATe), invited students to work together to create a colorful, collaborative, claymation video.

Students also enjoyed dance activities funded through a grant from the Maryland State Arts Council (MSAC). The grant was authored by Lisa Pellittiere, who coordinates tap instruction with the Greenbelt Dance Studio program (part of Greenbelt Recreation). A member of MSAC’s teaching artist roster, Pellittiere personally instructed the monthly dance activities which included student-generated improvisation games, upbeat footwork and jumps and choreographed routines to selections from stage and movie musicals ranging from Hamilton to Footloose to Sing.

The Greenbelt Recreation Arts program has provided afterschool arts programs for SHLES students for 12 years. The series, developed and coordinated throughout its history by Gardner, shifted from the school to SHLRC in 2023. The move adds variety for after-school program participants, and supports a healthy balance between homework time and play time.

In October of 2023, lucky third-grade students didn’t have to wait for school to let out in order to participate in Greenbelt Recreation arts activities. Over the span of two days, all third graders walked to the nearby SHLRC for fun field trip workshops. With Pellittiere, students learned the choreography for a flash mob dance that they were invited to perform at the Wild Rumpus, a Greenbelt Recreation Halloween celebration. Students also worked with Nicole DeWald, arts supervisor, and Amanda Larsen, visual arts coordinator, to create whimsical headdresses using recycled cardboard.

After the field trips, a participating SHLES teacher commented, “I love the inclusion of the art elements as well as math vocabulary (symmetrical and asymmetrical). Also, the preparation of supplies was excellent – students had everything they needed to create their project. They were given enough direction to meet the expectation of creating their crown, but also had the freedom to create.” Another teacher commented, “The activity was valuable, effective and enjoyable in a way that students were learning different contents (math/science, etc.) through dancing.”

Starting in April 2024, Greenbelt Recreation Arts expanded programming at SHLRC to provide regular opportunities for community members of all ages. Larsen has added free Artful Afternoon workshops on the second Sunday of the month, from 1 to 3 p.m. Advance sign-ups are encouraged, but walk-up guests are also welcome, while supplies last. Activities this spring have included Matisse-inspired papercuts with Barbara Joann Combs, spray painting with Shaymar Higgs and watercolor painting with Vanessa Daelemans. Artful Afternoons are a free series that originated at the Community Center, where they still continue on the first Sunday of most months. Residents of all neighborhoods are invited to participate in the workshops at either location. Artful Afternoons are supported by a grant from the MSAC, authored by DeWald.
